To Whom It May Concern,

It is with sincere pleasure that I recommend Meghan Hingst for an elementary teaching position in your District. I had the privilege of knowing Meghan as a student in TE406 at Michigan State University and as her field instructor during her internship year.

One of Meghan's most notable qualities is her genuine passion and love for children. This deep affection for her students is evident in her interactions and her commitment to creating a positive and supportive learning environment. She possesses a natural ability to form strong and meaningful relationships with her students, fostering a sense of trust and connection in the classroom.

Another significant strength that Meghan demonstrates is her proficiency in whole group instruction. She has a talent for engaging all students through effective modeling and the skillful use of thoughtful, probing questions. Her ability to present information clearly and interactively ensures that students are actively involved in the learning process and are encouraged to think critically.

During my observations of Meghan, I was consistently impressed by her ability to capture and maintain the attention of the entire class while facilitating meaningful learning experiences. Her clear explanations and well-crafted questions effectively guide student understanding and promote active participation.

In conclusion, Meghan Hingst's genuine passion for children and her strength in delivering engaging whole group instruction make her a promising and valuable candidate for an elementary teaching position. Her ability to build relationships and effectively engage students will undoubtedly make her a positive asset to your school community.
